"This year we really set out to deliver the most realistic-feeling football ever," said Joel Emslie, executive producer at EA Sports. "We used to rely more on the time and motion of a real player, now we understand this better and can apply it directly to the game, so you can have quicker decisions and better control with the ball." "After the incredible success of FIFA 17, including the 50 million total players we shipped, we set out to make the most realistic football game in the series," said Matt Bilbey, senior producer at EA Sports. "The data we've been using to make gameplay changes has come from 22 different players who played live in 2017, and the ability to use that real-world data, combined with enhancements to the engine, creates the most realistic, robust football game in the series." These features could make the method particularly useful for screening toxicological samples. Secondary structure transitions of aconitine alkaloid in liquid chromatographic analysis.
